Excerpt: . than she had taken of her own accord--at all events hitherto. Whatever he may have thought, he left the matter as it stood, and brought out his books and papers as, usual; but Aunt Ann took especial good care that evening not to disturb or interrupt him. Emmeline s hands trembled to such an extent that she could scarcely open the letter; and when she had done that, her eyes were for a time too dim with tears to read it. At last she became sufficiently composed to do so, and the best thing we can do is to give our readers the letter itself. Here it is. My Dear Sister, As I promised to write to you very soon, I write to say that we got down here last night quite safe, and they are all so kind here you cannot think. I am sorry to be so far away from you, dear, dear Emmy, for I do love you so dearly, and I am sure no one can ever love me so much as you do. I wish you were here; they are all so nice and kind. And I have six cousins, all girls; but one is quite a woman, and another very nearly, and Tom is so amusing you cannot think. I feel very happy, only I do so wish, dear Emmy, you could be here too; it would be so pleasant. I cannot write any more, as this...
