Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Early Persian Poetry: From the Beginnings Down to the Time of Firdausi; With Ten Illustrations This book is a labor of love - the outcome of years of devotion to the study of Persia, its history, languages, and literature, and is in part the result of four journeys through the Land of the Sun, in 1903, 1907, 1910, and 1918. Some of the records of these travels have appeared in print elsewhere. The appreciation with which those studies were received has been an incentive to supplement them by a literary presentation, in brief form, of the earlier poetry of Persia down to about 1000 a.d., so as to include Firdausi s Shah-namah, or Book of Kings, the great epic poem of Persia. Perhaps the reception of the present work may give encouragement enough to lead to the preparation of a couple of volumes on Persian Mystic Poetry and on The Lyric and Romantic Poetry of Iran. The aim of the chapters included in the present volume - and I hope that they may not be found unduly long - is to give succinctly the main outlines of the several early periods now chosen for presentation, and to illustrate, by translations made from the original Persian, the characteristics of the various authors, regarding whom I have gathered material from all sorts of sources, native and foreign. Many of the citations are only small fragments of verse from Persian poets so long dead that they have been evoked almost as shades from the far-distant past; but there is something very human in their brief messages that makes their story more up-to-date than might be imagined. About the...
